

Carl Kennebrew
President

May 4, 2020

Dear GE Directors,

I wish I could join you at your annual meeting tomorrow to offer my greetings and make this appeal to you in person. Sadly, that is not possible. Let me begin by wishing you a productive meeting, a successful year for the company that means so much to all of us, and, on a personal note, I wish each of you a safe and healthy journey through this pandemic which is causing grief and hardship to so many.

The pandemic, in fact, is a key reason I am writing to you. As the president of the largest union representing General Electric employees, I have the responsibility of informing you of issues of critical importance to GE and its employees--issues that were omitted from the company's annual report. I would like to think the omission occurred because the report was crafted prior to the ravages of COVID-19, but in reality, the concerns of GE's employees rarely feature in your annual meeting even in the best of times.

Of course, health and safety is always a central concern of GE employees and the union. Many of our members continue to feel unsafe in GE facilities and fear going to work. We call on you to make the safety of these workers your top priority.

In addition, along with many business analysts, we have serious concerns about GE's approach to the overall direction of the company. Decades of cutting the workforce and shipping our jobs overseas have left GE a weaker, less profitable company and left America far worse off.

Today we call on President Trump and GE's Board to tell management to stop shipping our jobs overseas. We want to build more ventilators for sale to hospitals here and throughout the world by bringing this work to unused space in existing GE facilities within the United States.

We know that many responsible companies are innovating as they step up to meet the pandemic's unique challenges. While GE will be conducting the annual meeting, President Trump will be flying to Phoenix, where Honeywell will soon be producing millions of N95 masks for first responders in a formerly mothballed aerospace manufacturing plant.

We insist that GE step up as well.

Our concerns go beyond our appeal to produce more ventilators than GE Healthcare is able to do in its Madison facility. GE's continued off-shoring of jobs is just a renewal of the business model created by Jack Welch, who received his "Neutron Jack" moniker for wiping out over 100,000 jobs, devastating American cities and towns, and leaving behind hundreds of empty factory buildings.

We are attaching for your inspection a list of some of the thousands of jobs sent overseas in the years following Jack Welch's retirement. Just last December, contrary to what GE told Roanoke Times reporters, production work at GE's Salem, Virginia, plant was shipped to China and India. This fact is corroborated in various company documents, contemporaneous statements by management officials, and eyewitness reports from hourly and salaried employees who traveled to India to assist with the transition, and the many employees who spoke with Indian and Chinese manufacturing engineers when they visited the plant in Virginia for training.

Now another highly-rated workforce in Dallas, Texas has been told that GE is closing their plant and they will lose their jobs.

The continued shuttering of productive, viable, high-quality operations is particularly hard to swallow when GE has options to make these plants even more efficient by introducing new products.

Imagine how the employees and community leaders in Virginia and Texas reacted when they heard that instead of bringing ventilator manufacturing to its own factories, GE was assisting Ford Motor Company in introducing ventilator work to a Ford facility. GE claimed it wasn't practical to use excess capacity to do this work in its own plants, but since then, management has transferred workers from GE's Lafayette, Indiana plant to boost production of ventilators at the GE Healthcare facility in Madison, Wisconsin.

If the Indiana employees can make ventilators, so can the highly-skilled workers in Virginia, Texas, or at numerous other sites, including Schenectady, New York, where they previously manufactured mammography imaging machines in a clean production room.

Our members have the skills to make ventilators and to make GE a profitable company, if management can be persuaded to return to its roots as an American company that puts America's needs and American workers first.

For this reason, on behalf of thousands of GE workers across the country – and on behalf of their families and communities – I am calling on President Trump to use his full and unique authority under the Defense Production Act to put our members back to work. Apparently the President alone can provide GE with the motivation to partner with its workforce to meet this crisis head on. Our members want to work to save American lives.

GE's Board of Directors must finally reject the failed business model that favors short term gains and management bonuses over long term viability. Without a change, the future of General Electric looks bleak.

We appeal to you for the sake of GE shareholders and GE's American employees. Stop shipping our jobs overseas — before it is too late and you destroy this once grand American company.

Respectfully,

A Compendium of GE Outsourcing of Jobs Overseas From Department of Labor Reports of Financial Assistance to Displaced General Electric Workers from 1974-2019

To obtain Trade Adjustment Act reemployment services and benefits a group of workers must first file a petition with the U.S Department of Labor's Trade Adjustment Assistance Program (TAA) requesting certification as workers adversely affected by foreign trade. Once a complete petition is filed, the Office of Trade Adjustment Assistance (OTAA) initiates an investigation to determine whether a group of workers meets the group eligibility requirements. If the worker group meets the group eligibility criteria, a group eligibility certification will be issued.

This list reflects petitions from GE workers that were certified from 1974-2019. Details on these petitions are available on the Department of Labor's website at https://www.doleta.gov/tradeact/petitioners/taa\_search\_form.cfm.
